PHILADELPHIA. SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1827.

TO READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS.

The contributions of SYLVIA—SHEILA—MELINDA—ROBERT—E.—ALFONSO—H. &c. are received.

An obituary notice signed "W." is too lengthy for our columns.

Lines entitled "Friendship is as true today as when we parted," shall be inserted.

"A Foe to Tyranny," will require some corrections before it can be given to the public.

"Dedicated Thoughts" No. 1.—our new friend OCTAVIA, is welcome—we desire that he may be induced to continue the Essays he has so satisfactorily commenced.

A letter from an American gentleman in Edinburgh, and another from a friend of ours on a visit to the "Hot Springs" in Virginia, are reserved for next week.

"THE SOUVENIR."

In glancing over the exchange papers we receive, our attention is "ever and anon" arrested by the caption of this article, followed by remarks highly commendatory of the publication of that name issued by Mr. Philip Price, jr. of this city.

Not desiring to fall short of our brother Editors in courtesy and good feeling, and anxious moreover to promote the interests of a praiseworthy undertaking, we again call the attention of our readers to this valuable miscellany. It has now reached its fourth number, and we are gratified in being able to say, has amply sustained that excellence of character which upon the credit of its first appearance we were induced to ascribe to it.

The selections, of which it has, hitherto, chiefly consisted have uniformly been made with great taste and judgment, being of the first order both as regards the interest attached to their subjects, and the ability of composition they display; and the original contributions would not suffer upon comparison with those of any weekly periodical in the Union. Indeed we do not remember to have seen any similar publication more deserving, in all respects, of extensive patronage. Combining every variety of that species of literature which, though destitute of its higher attributes, is still light, easy, graceful and pleasant, and emphatically calculated to blend moral improvement with innocent amusement, it offers attractions to all classes of readers. To the man of science, fatigued by the pursuit of severer studies, it affords a graceful relaxation from mental and to the man of business, a happy respite from bodily toil; and all such as can derive pleasure from a well told tale, a sprightly essay, or the inspiration of song, may find abundance to satisfy their respective desires.

On the Ladies it has peculiar claims. Comprising such articles as cannot fail to prove interesting or entertaining to a well cultivated female mind; care has been used to avoid every thing that might, in any way, "give virtue scandal, or decency a stain."

Additional to this it is partly appropriated to Fashion, and those who are curious in matters relating to this changeable and fantastic divinity, may receive ample gratification from its pages. The manner, too, is correspondent to the matter, and we have no hesitation in saying that the great variety and sterling quality of the latter—the propriety of its arrangement—the neatness with which it is printed, and the pains taken in drying, pressing and trimming the work before its delivery to subscribers, will enable those who possess the different numbers to form, at the close of every year, a handsome volume, which intrinsically and externally will make a valuable accession to every library.

But it is not on these recommendations alone, great as they unquestionably are, that "The Souvenir" relies for encouragement and support. It is also sustained by a powerful motive to public favour.

Accompanying and forming part of the first No. of every month, the Publisher furnishes subscribers with a beautiful quarto copper-plate engraving, descriptive of highly interesting scenery, either foreign or domestic; and once in every quarter a plate of similar size faithfully illustrative of the Philadelphia Fashions. The introductory number contained a view of the Allamuchy, a beautiful Moorish Castle, and the Publisher has announced that in the 5th No. he will present his patrons with a view of Mont Blanc, one of the most awful and sublime productions of nature. A plate of the Fashions was furnished with the second number, and another is announced as being in preparation, which will be ready for delivery in two weeks.

These plates, of which, including an engraved title page, seventeen will be published annually, would, if purchased at the usual cost, amount, exclusive of the letter-press, to a much greater value than the annual subscription.

We heartily commend this work to our readers as being the cheapest, most valuable, and interesting miscellany of which we have any knowledge. It is published every Wednesday, and is printed in quarto form, on fine white paper, and each number is cut, and stitched in a handsome cover, to enable subscribers the better to preserve them.

Price of subscription, only $2.50 per annum, payable in advance. Orders sent to this office, will meet with prompt attention.

INTEMPERANCE.

Within a short time there has been formed in this city, a Society, whose ostensible purpose is to check the progress of Intemperance. The persons who have associated in this important undertaking, have given their little compact the title of "Pen Society."

In the great objects which this Society has in view, every member in the community is particularly concerned—there is not a family in the whole range of our country that has not some member smitten with the leprosy of this wide-spread pestilence; it does indeed come up into all our borders, and while it marks the pleasures and blights the prospects of the fairest portion of our land, it is found the leaven of all disaster, and a first cause and accompanying attribute of manifold misery and crime.

It is a small thing to say of "Intemperance," that no other cause has wrought out so many evils for the community as has this; all other evils, we venture to say, all other independent sources of public shame, and private misery, when weighed against the immediate use of ardent spirits, are but "straw in the ascending balance."

We know all the argument that sophistry and good fellowship use for an encouragement of the cup—we are told "wine cheers the heart," and it should be taken "for the stomach's sake"—but with us, and we think with every reflecting person, the subject is placed beyond the reach of a quotation or syllogism; it is but for a man to open his eyes, to see that it were better that the advantages of use of liquor, (if any advantages can be named,) should be lost, than that they should be made an argument in favor of its most extensive and fatal abuse.

When some alarming shock of late strikes through the hearts of our citizens a dread of early death, our authorities consult with earnestness, and fear how they may avert the threatened calamity; and while the philanthropic, and those treated with respect seek the means to avert or mitigate the calamities, others fly to stimulants; they gather up their little ones and seek safety beyond the reach of contagion—But what are our fears, plagues, or the most loathsome and filthy diseases that climate or accident have experienced, compared either in extent or individual misery, to the single curse of drunkenness? a pestilence nourished in our families, and haggard to the brain with a bewitching fondness, till society, instead of starting from its deadly influence, has yielded victim after victim to its power without a sigh for their fate, or an effort either to prevent or remedy the evil.

We will not now stop to make statistical tables, to swell our article, or enforce our argument, suffice it to say, that in the catalogue of four hundred papers at an almshouse in our country, three hundred and fifty were indebted to intemperance for their poverty and disease. It is not only a peculiar disease of our country, but the fruitful mother of every kind of evil; it dims the eyes, blunts the form, and palsies the hands of youth—poisoning and infusing the blood, giving the nights to madness, and days to miserable and unavailing penitence. We scarcely can trace the progress of this curse along the paths of society, so sure, so unerring is its course, and so uniform its devastation, that what we intended as a general description, would be mistaken for a particular individual reference, and we should be mortified with the demand "Is it I?"

"But the Society," it will be said, "what can that effect? no man has the power to snatch the cup from his neighbor's throat"—we confess that, but its members may agree among themselves to follow the scriptures so far as to "put the cup there—we, however, see, or we decide ourselves in the value of example, how the Society may do much good—They can set a good example to others by their own abstinence, that is something; and we beg leave here to introduce a rule for intemperance, which, although we have forgotten the author thereof, will not be found without much virtue—"neither drink yourself, nor ask your friends to drink;" let such a rule be obtained in a few respectable families, and we should find a check to much intemperance.

But the Society have it in their power to exercise a greater influence and one of greater importance from the sphere in which it is exercised—let them offer premiums through master mechanics, to persons in their employment, who shall wholly abstain from the use of ardent spirits, and by this means check the progress of intemperance in those who have but entered the downward course, and perhaps heal a few who have plunged deeply into the mire.

We trust that the excellent views of the Society will be seconded by those who possess influence; surely none can be indifferent to the importance of the subject, nor one who has a spark of philanthropy left, but must bid God speed to the effort for suppressing intemperance.

If some one lack "a motive or cue" for action, let him look into any family and he will find some among its connections withering the expectations of doing parents, and calling up the blush of shame on the cheek of confiding and disappointed kindred; he will see the deadly drought working out shame and poverty and disease and crime—giving the body the loathsomeness of leprosy, and brutifying and blasting the mind—he will see the path of Intemperance trod close and rapidly, from the first down-sliding and easy entrance, its thousand converging alleys of refined luxuries, and inceptive draughts, down to the broad, all-engulfing slop of beastly drunkenness, where patriotism, glory, fame, love of friends, kindred, home and self, all are swallowed up—and each successive self-devoting victim smothered under the path of infamy to his followers—and if there is to be found no reason in such things, for endeavouring to check the progress of drunkenness, then is human society, with all its means of pleasure and of comfort, home, the domestic circle, parental fondness and filial love, a very day dream, a vision of the brain, and in the language of the poet, the Centaur is no longer fabulous: But the beast has carried off the man.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

MRS. FELICIA HEMANS.

Messrs. Editors.—Having seen in the last No. of a contemporary paper some very ingenious remarks under this head, I do not now permit me to say a few words for a lady whose beautiful productions have often added value to your columns.

We might have passed over this "most conceited" Editor's own original opinion, and smiled to see him "spit against the wind," we might have seen the spleenful disposition of the "accomplished wit," when, in his treatment of this lady, he renounces "the character of the foolish-gentleman," and considered his "words, words, words," as the idle wind, but that a statement there made, as a matter of fact, is entirely incorrect, and therefore likely to be of more injury than his opinion. He says "Mrs. Hemans has lately published a volume of miscellaneous poems, chiefly such as have gone the rounds of the newspapers." The volume lately published is a large octavo; contains a long poem entitled "The Legend of the Alps," and two Dramas, one "The Vespers of Palermo."

These occupy three fourths of the volume, the remainder contains the miscellaneous pieces, half of which perhaps have been published before—Thus we see the Editor has disclaimed what he never read—not only that he cannot publish poems he has never read, but that he understands reviewing without reading—One of two things he must acknowledge—either that he knew nothing of the volume of which he spoke, or that his knowledge of the poetry of Mrs. Hemans is confined to newspaper extracts, or, that he did know and maliciously misrepresented the merits and character of the volume.

This much should be said in justice to Mrs. Hemans, an unprotected female, struggling for a living by the efforts of her pen—and that I deem the opinion of this Editor is likely to injure a name too firmly fixed for the efforts of his pen to shake, but that those who read his notice may not mistake the character of the contents of the work—of its merits I shall say nothing—they have been duly appreciated, and the judgment of the American Quarterly, backed by the public, will hardly be shaken by the writer, who, if he expects to make "a living by the efforts of his pen" from the ladies, should behave with more courtesy to them.

A FRIEND TO CANDOUR.

The Clerk for August, contains an excellent copper-plate engraving view of the Residence of COLLETT SULLIVAN, (Joseph Bonaparte) at Bordentown, N. J. with appropriate references—also a description and engraving of NARRAGANSETT, procured expressly for this No. We have occasion to say, that future subscribers may be supplied with this popular work from the commencement of the present volume, at $2.50, by applying at our office—in the course of which time 16 superior Engravings have been interspersed in it, exclusive of 25 wood-cuts. The subjects of the copper-plates are principally portraits of American statesmen and other distinguished citizens—the wood-cuts are many of them devoted to the elucidation of some of the most remarkable scenes which have occurred in this country, and also to the subject of History, the study of which, we are pleased to say, is making rapid advances among the ladies, for whose amusement and edification its introduction into the CASSET was chiefly intended. Our friend Mr. Noah, in his paper of this week, gives us further information, which we here insert, respecting the FALLS of TRENTON in the State of New York. A view of this splendid natural curiosity, engraved by that excellent artist, Mr. G. Gilbert, (for the CASSET), is this day presented to our readers.

Trenton Falls.—The number of visitors to these interesting Falls during the present season is much greater than it has been in any former year. Few persons now pass here on the Niagara river without spending a day or two in making a journey to Trenton, and viewing the beauties which it presents to the admirer of romantic scenery. We were there on Saturday, and were surprised as well as pleased to find the large establishment of our old friend Sherman completely overgrown with fashionable, bolivar, and top-knots, and bon-nets, and flowers, and shoulers of muslin of white gauze, and black gauze, (we beg pardon of the ladies for not knowing their French names) a vast variety of et ceteras, which we have not time to enumerate, were seen moving in all directions. In the course of the day we counted some post coaches, several heaves and a large number of gigs, going and returning in parties. The water is at present remarkably high, which increases the Falls to appear to much more advantage than usual, and we therefore recommend to those who reside in the vicinity, and who wish to visit them, to avail themselves of this opportunity of seeing these Falls in their greatest beauty.

It is with painful feelings we record the occurrence of a most melancholy event which took place on Saturday last at Trenton Falls, (an account of which is given in this day's paper.) Miss Eliza M. Sullivan, of the city of New York, aged 17 years, daughter of John Sullivan, Esq. who with his late family, and a large party of friends, left New York on Wednesday, while viewing the Falls, in the forenoon, passed round a narrow ledge of rocks, missed her foot hold, and fell into the foaming whirlpool below. The body was found about forty rods from the place where she fell in, and was to be interred at Ulster on Monday afternoon last. This heart-rending calamity, which the eyes of her friends, who witnessed the destruction of their child without the slightest possibility of rescue.

John Sergeant, Esq. and his Secretary Mr. Broad, have arrived at the Lazaretto, in the brig Eliza.

LATE FROM EUROPE.

By arrivals at New York.

Parliament was to be prorogued on the 22d of June.

The divorce bill of Miss Turner, against Wakefield, has passed the House of Commons. It now only awaits the Royal assent to pass into a law.

The John Bull of the 10th inst. intimates that Mrs. Conitt, widow of the late celebrated banker, was to be married on the following day to the Duke of St. Albans.

Mr. Chatterley is now collecting specimens of the leaves and flowers of the trees and plants which grow in the forests of Canada—These he intends to send to England, and he expects that it will create a demand there for our choicest forest trees, and consequently the seats of English nobles and gentlemen.

A London paper says that a certain Learned Lord has lately found leisure to go to Church, and is said to have behaved with great violence when surprised into repeating that part of the Creed where a belief is expressed in the Holy Catholic Church. It was afterwards satisfactorily explained to his Lordship that it did not mean the Roman Catholic Church.

The late English papers say that Lord Norbury has resigned the office of justice of the common pleas, and was about to retire from public life. He is to be created viscount Glanville. Lord Plunkett succeeds to the chief justiceship. Lord Mansfield was about to resign the Irish seat; and (as before named).

The Drama.
